Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 1400 on Saturday 22 May 2021

UK Outlook for Thursday 27 May 2021 to Saturday 5 Jun 2021:
High pressure will slowly become the overarching pattern across the UK during this period, as it gradually builds in from the west. This will bring mostly settled conditions across the country, but with the chance of showers in the east at first. There however remains the risk of some brief interludes of rain or showers at times, most likely affecting areas in the far south or the far north. Temperatures overall are likely to be close to or below the average for this time of year, with some warmer days balanced out by colder nights. Becoming more uncertain later in the period, but the most likely scenario is for largely dry weather to continue across much of the UK, particularly in southern and eastern parts of the country.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.